

Clarity Bright
— and the —
Too Much Problem

by Ana Lezama

Meet Clarity Bright

Clarity Bright is six years old.
She is the second girl in a family of four children.

She learned to read when she was three.
By first grade, she was multiplying and dividing numbers just for fun.

Clarity asks a lot of questions.
Big ones.
Deep ones.
The kind that make grown-ups pause before answering.

She loves science, nature, numbers, and the planets.
She reads books that are "too advanced" for her age—
especially encyclopedias about animals, anatomy, and the universe.
Her mama hides them.
Clarity finds them.

She doesn't ask questions to be difficult.
She asks because she is hungry to understand the world.

Clarity Bright doesn't just live in the world.
She studies it.
She wonders about it.
She questions it.

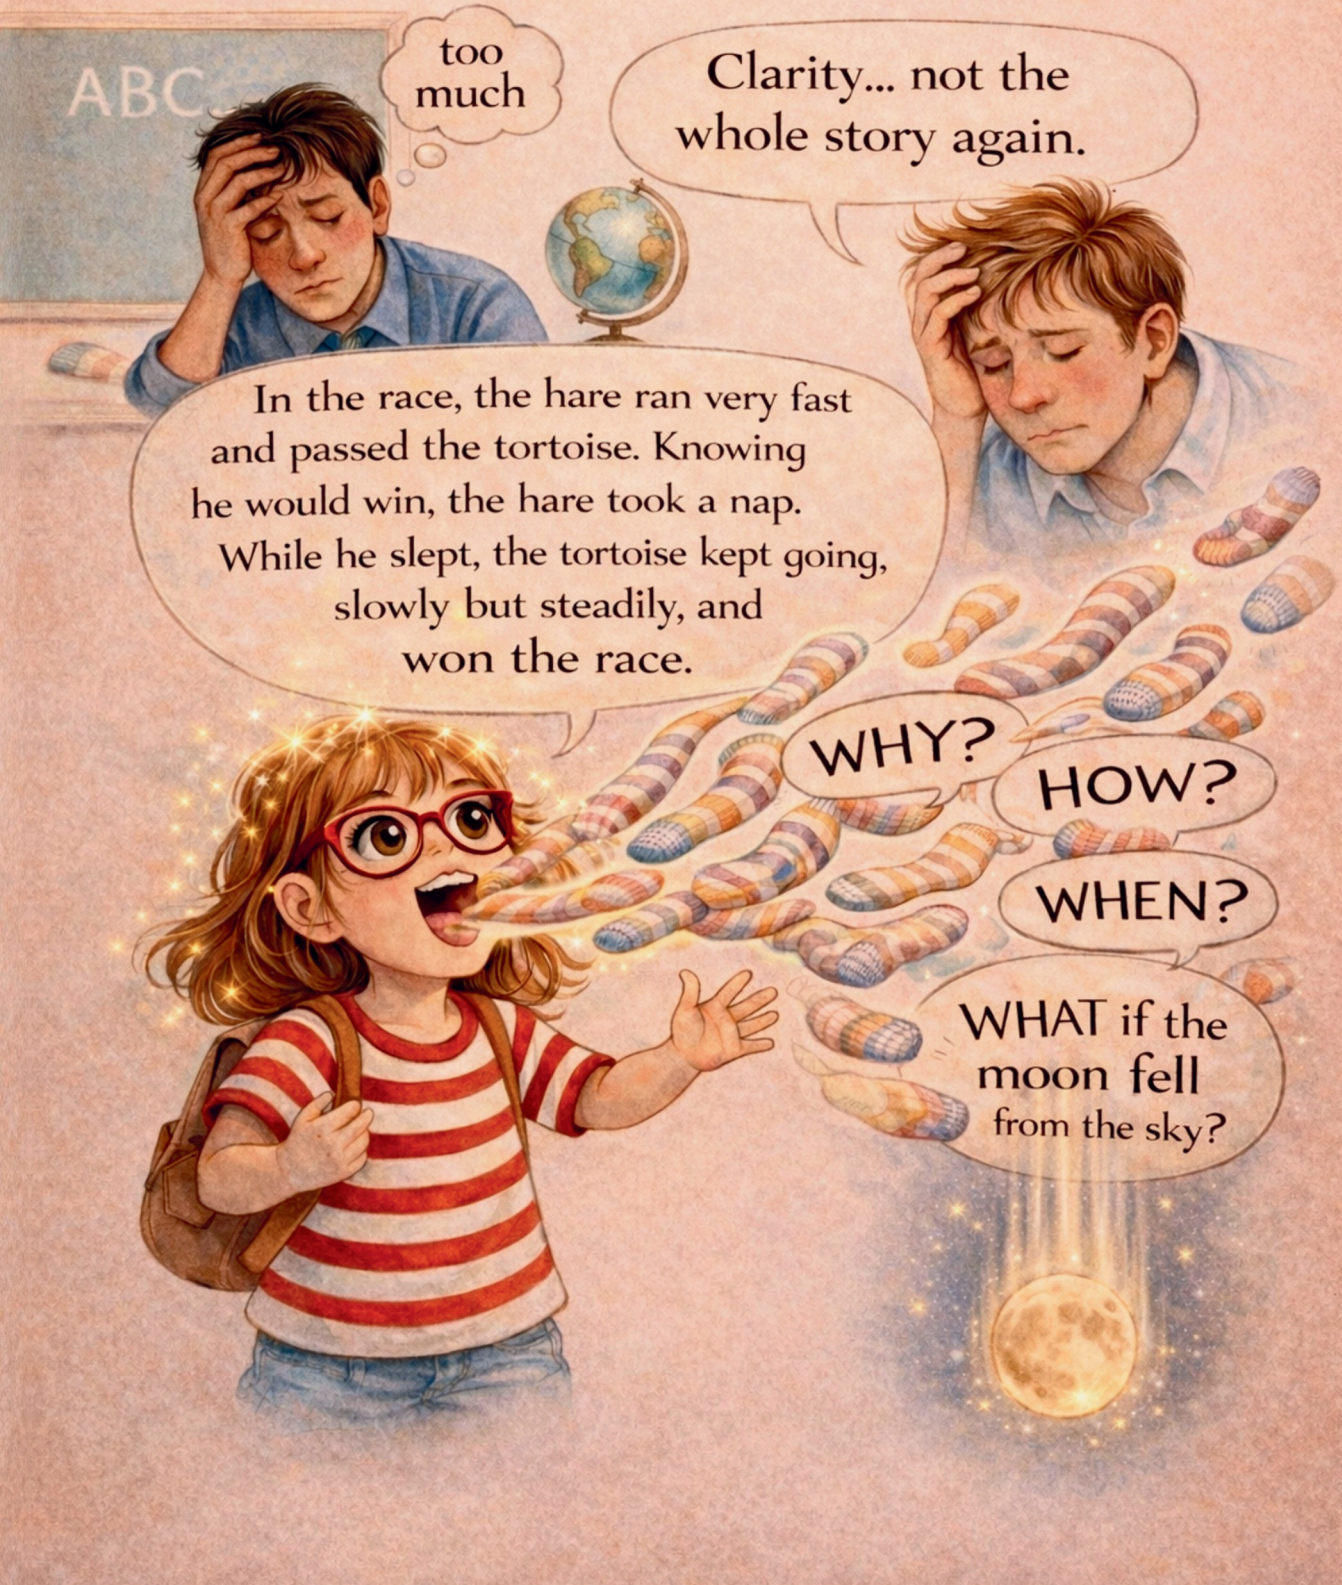

And she shines because of it.

Sometimes grown-ups sighed and closed their eyes.

Or gently said,

much

Clarity... not the whole story again.

In the race, the hare ran very fast and passed the tortoise. Knowing he would win, the hare took a nap.
While he slept, the tortoise kept going,
slowly but steadily, and won the race.

WHY?

HOW?

WHEN?

WHAT if the moon fell from the sky?

Clarity's Tiny Space Guide

A little science surprise from Clarity

I ask lots of questions...
and some of my favorite questions are about space.

This is Earth.

Earth is our home.

It is the planet
where we live.

Clarity Bright and the Mystery of the Missing Urn

When the decorative urn from Clarity's front porch disappears, Clarity and her friends don't panic—they investigate!

With notebooks in hand, clues to follow, and questions flying faster than ever, they create their very own Detective Club to solve the case.

But solving a mystery isn't just about finding answers...

It's about teamwork, patience, and learning how to listen to every detail.

Will they uncover the truth behind the missing urn?
in the next Clarity Bright adventure!
